Unusual friends

Tom and Jerry is an American series of short animated movies, starring a cat (Tom) and a mouse (Jerry). There is another regular character – a dog called Spike. Tom and Jerry cartoons are famous all over the world and almost everyone knows Tom and Jerry because they have seen them on television. The plot is almost always the same. The cat wants to catch the mouse, but something bad always happens to the cat and he never catches the mouse. The cat always loses in the end and the mouse wins. There is sometimes a lot of violence, but in reality the cat and the mouse like each other and are good friends. Two American cartoonists, William Hanna and Joseph Barbera, created Tom and Jerry for MGM studios. Hanna was born in New Mexico in 1910, and Barbera was born in New York in 1911. The two men met in 1937 in Los Angeles, California, when they were working at the same movie studio. In fact, they were working at desks opposite each other. Hanna and Barbera soon started working together making animated movies. They made the first Tom and Jerry cartoon in 1940. It was called Puss Gets the Boot. It was very successful and received an Oscar nomination. In total, more than 160 episodes of Tom and Jerry were made, and Hanna and Barbera made 130 of them. In 1965, Tom and Jerry was shown on television for the first time, and in 1992 a full-length movie was made, called Tom and Jerry: The Movie. Tom and Jerry won seven Oscars for the best short cartoon between 1943 and 1952 and received six other nominations for Oscars, but did not win any awards. William Hanna died in 2001 at the age of 90, and Joseph Barbera died in 2006. He was 95.
