❖ Read the text and complete the sentence.

A Chinese woman had lived in Australia for a few years. On her birthday, she was invited to the home of an Australia friend to celebrate. When she was presented with a gift, she thanked her friend and put the gift away. Her friend asked, “Aren’t you going to open it?” The Chinese lady said, “Oh no! I don’t want to open it now”.

In Chinese culture, one is not expected to open a gift immediately after receiving it.

In Australian culture, however, the opposite is true. There are other rules about gift giving in Chinese culture. It is important, for example, to avoid giving umbrellas, knives, scissors and clocks.

Iranian culture has its rules too. Amanda, a Young North, American woman, went to home of her fiancé’s sister. She saw a small statue, and when she said she liked it, the sister insisted to give her. Why? Many middle Easterners feel obligated to give something to someone who admires it. Amanda didn’t want to accept the statue, but Fariba, the sister, kept insisting. Amanda should have kept on refusing. Iranians may keep on insisting, but you are under no obligation to accept.
